This Month -- We Launch our "I am a Results Manager" Campaign

Are you? A Results Manager I mean. Are you managing Results or are the tasks you need to accomplish managing you? Read on and we'll give you the solutions others have used to become breakout stars within their companies.

Professional and personal users of ResultsManager have one thing in common: they're implementation heroes. When departments and teams aren't running as well as they should, ResultsManager provides a cultural solution that improves everything it touches.

June - The Journey of the Internal Champion Begins . . .

Bill Hero quit wishing for better results and made them happen! In this issue you'll discover how this enterprising department head used ResultsManager to become a hero in his organization by creating breakthroughs in time saved, productivity increased and effort optimized.

Bill had been using ResultsManager for a short while at his home office to manage his many personal projects. But after he got promoted to Department Head and his responsibilities grew, he knew he needed an edge to keep all the new plates spinning, as well as handle the people and tasks he already managed.

One weekend, frustrated by the new demands on this time and energy, it hit him - why not manage some of his additional responsibilities with ResultsManager? Bill mapped out one key team project and ran a dashboard just to see just how well it could work.

Bill got even more excited about the preliminary results. ResultsManager was certainly low-cost enough to make it easy on the department budget. And it was scaleable, so he could start with his small team and build out from there.

All in all, he thought it would be a justifiable purchase for his team.

So, how to get his boss on board? What was a good, fast way to show the results he could produce while at the same time have visual cues within the dashboard that said what was important about each section?

Bill got to work and customized a quick dashboard on-the-fly. One that would quickly and easily show what each section of a dashboard was designed to accomplish.

So Bill came up a short list of what was important about each section on his dashboard. For Relationship Central he wrote:

"Conquer your Relationships by seeing a list for each person showing:

- What I owe
- What I'm waiting for
- What I need to talk to the person about

ALWAYS - IN - CHARGE."

Bill knew that the easiest way to explain it to his boss was to show him. So Bill created some quick Callouts with some friendly explanations of each section and voila, Bill's Daily Actions Dashboard - The Guide Edition was born. Click here to see what Bill presented to his boss.

The next day he floated the idea by his boss who, while sceptical at first, was intrigued by Bill's demonstration of how much his team's productivity could jump once ResultsManager was in place.

His boss was particularly interested in the Relationship Central area. In each generated dashboard, a team leader could see at a glance everything he owed other team members, and simultaneously see everything that was owed to him and when it was due.

So how did Bill use ResultsManager to solve this thorny issue? You can download his map and discover for yourself. We got him to release his exclusive dashboard that he used to show his boss what was possible to accomplish with ResultsManager at the team level.

Special Exclusive June Offer for You:

Hi Everyone, Jo Mais here. I'm the Office Manager here at Gyronix, but truth be told -- I actually run everything <grin>.

Nik Tipler, our beloved CEO is, along with the rest of England still in the throes of the football world cup (that's "soccer" for all our American friends) so he's in a very good mood and has offered the following limited time offer for as long as England is still in the running (the next game is Saturday, so it may be for a very limited time):

We've found in talking to all of you who call in, that the only thing everyone needs more than ResultsManager, is training to really milk the most out of ResultsManager.

So, here's what we're going to do. Nik created two very special, very deeply-discounted training bundles. Whether you're an individual user or company team member, I promise you that one of these ResultsManager Live! Mastery bundles will give you everything you need to become a Results Manager!

What's the deal? How about three training modules for the price of two!
